

Town Council Meeting.

A meeting of the Town Council was held on Friday evening, 8th inst. The Mayor reported two tenders were received for running the watering cart, and the lowest, that of R. L. McLean, $1.40 per day, was accepted.

Throwing White-Hot Bolts.

The passing of white-hot bolts from section to section of the new Continental Building, in course of erection at the corner of Baltimore and Calvert streets, Baltimore, is one of the spectacles in connection with the setting of the steel for the structure which help entertain the great numbers who day after day congregate about this busy vicinity.

Cronje and the Phonograph.

Capt. J. W. Webster, who will pass into history as the man who took General Cronje to St. Helena, tells some interesting things about his distinguished prisoner. "I was rather nonplused to know what to do for the old gentleman's diversion.

As to Hell.

What has become of Hell? This somewhat startling question heads an article by the Rev. G. W. Shinn, in the June number of the North American Review. Dr. Shinn does not attempt to answer his own question, specifically.

Are You Bilious THEN TRY Parsons' Pills and get relief, and you will never use any other medicine to cure Sick Headache and Bowel complaints.

Children and Wheels.

It is a curious fact that of all sportsmen bicyclers seem to be the most sensitive to criticism from a hygienic point of view. This is possible because they get so much of such criticism, and certainly with the air so full of warning and admonition, adults may now be left mostly to their own discretion.

Portraits of the Sun.

Photographic observations of the recent total eclipse of the sun will certainly prove more satisfactory and valuable than any hitherto obtained. On no previous occasion has the scientific outfit for picture-making been anything like so complete, and publication of prints from the negatives secured by the Smithsonian Institution with the aid of its gigantic camera, set up at Wadesboro, North Carolina, in the track of the moon's shadow is awaited with eagerness by astronomers.

Leaves From the Diary of a Pilgrim.

SATURDAY, June 2.

We leave Montreal in a great downpour of rain—a perfect deluge. In spite of the rain there are many gathered on the pier to see us off.

Last evening at eight we all met at the Cathedral, St. James's, to assist at Pontifical Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament.

We reached Quebec at 7 p. m. Carriages—cabs, caleches, and vehicles of all sorts—are in readiness to convey the pilgrim party to the Chapel of the Ursulines.

Down the river we glide swiftly in the stillness of the night. On either bank is a fine stretch of fertile land, studded with picturesque villages and dotted with the houses of les habitants.

PENTECOST SUNDAY, JUNE 3.

Nine or ten pilgrims have joined us at Quebec. We are now ninety-two in all, including twenty-three priests.

As some of us sit at a late breakfast, one of the stewards announces that there will be Divine Service in the saloon at eleven.

man shiver, in the days that followed his escape from "the city of confusion." Subjectively, let it be granted divine, as every service may be spoken of as divine which is offered to God in good faith.

In the afternoon we assemble in our chapel to sing the vespers of the day. Several of the lay pilgrims, men and women, lend their voices, and the ship resounds with the strains of the divine psalmody, the Veni Creator, Spiritus and the Magnificat.

In the evening at eight there is service in English. We sing two hymns, Nearer My God to Thee, and Come Holy Ghost. Many of the French priests and lay pilgrims, join us in singing.

All day long we steam down the St. Lawrence, hugging the southern bank. Early in the afternoon the mountains of St. Anne are seen in the distance.

MONDAY, JUNE 4.

We have passed Gaspe and are in the Gulf. To the south Bird Rock is dimly seen. Our passenger list—already a long one—has received an addition during the night.

The presence of the birds on board gives rise to not a little speculation. Why has the sparrow left its cosy nest and the hawk its home on the dry land to roam over this waste of waters?

By 10.30 a. m. we are abreast of Cape Ray. As we steam by Channel, otherwise known as Port Basque, we descry the massive hulk of the Elder-Dempster liner, Montpellier, wrecked here some weeks ago.

We are now fairly at sea, and our ship has made her first bow to the Atlantic rollers. This token of homage old Neptune claims, nay commands and compels, from every ship that presses upon his bosom.

TUESDAY, JUNE 5.

A little before noon Cape Race is on our larboard quarter, and in an hour or two more we catch our last glimpse of the rock-bound coast of Terra Nova.

says, "has been retold here to-night." Precisely at 11 o'clock the sound of the whistle warns us that we have at last run into the inevitable fog.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 6.

A good deal of motion in the ship; fewer passengers at the breakfast table. Still Masses are celebrated from 5.30 to 8, and several of the priests and lay pilgrims receive Holy Communion.

THURSDAY, JUNE 7.

From noon yesterday till noon to-day we have covered 316 nautical miles, and are now a little more than half-way across from Quebec to Liverpool.

Day. Lat. Long. Dist. run. 7 30.06 N. 35.30 W. 316

Remarks: Moderate winds, choppy sea. The reader will please bear in mind that this is from a ship's log, and that the "remarks" are to be understood in a strictly nautical sense.

There is little to break the monotony of a sea voyage. One day is just like another. You wake in the morning, rise, go through the same little round of actions, turp in again at night.

FRIDAY, JUNE 8.

This morning, in spite of the rolling of the ship, Masses were said and several of the pilgrims received Holy Communion.

There is little to break the monotony of a sea voyage. One day is just like another. You wake in the morning, rise, go through the same little round of actions, turp in again at night.

SATURDAY, JUNE 9.

One pilgrim who has been well enough up till now, is so squeamish to-day that he dare not write even half a dozen lines for fear of consequences.

TRINITY SUNDAY, JUNE 10.

The sea still runs "choppy." It has been our worst night since we came on board—"rocked in the cradle of the deep," but with no gentle hand.

MONDAY, JUNE 11

I have spoken of Masses said under difficulties. There are difficulties and difficulties. While I was serving Father Kavanagh's Mass at 8 o'clock this morning, voices pitched in a high key came from a stateroom hard by.
