

Seigniorial Homes of French Canada.

(By F. S. Somerville, in Busy Man's Magazine.)

Scattered throughout the Province of Quebec, there stand more than two hundred and fifty quaint and picturesque old manor houses...

With the seigniorial system and its workings, it is not the purpose of this article to deal. Suffice it to say that the system, while introduced in the first place for military purposes...

It is only possible within the limits of a magazine article to glance at a few of the more notable manors and to contemplate any feature connected with them which render them worthy of notice.

The manor house on the Seigneurie de la Petite Nation is one of the finest examples of old manorial architecture in the Province of Quebec. This seigniorie was granted to Bishop Laval by the Company of the West Indies in 1674...

This particular house is more pretentious than most of the manor houses of Quebec, although it follows almost precisely in design the usual style. Near by the old house is the chapel and other buildings...

Another old manor house which has an exceedingly interesting history is that situated on the Seigneurie L'Islet du Portage in the Comy of Kamouraska. This seigniorie was granted by the good Intendant Talon, in the year 1672...

A tragedy associated with the history of this old seigniorial home is the foundation of superstition, which prevails among the habitants even to the present day. Although enacted nearly a century ago the belief still obtains among them...

easily killed his adversary and became the successful suitor for the hand of the fair young lady. The victim of this unfortunate affair is believed to have been buried beneath the trees at the rear of the manor house...

The foregoing story is a fair example of many that hover about these old mansions. As an instance of the wonderful hold which the seigniorial system of land tenure has even to this day upon the habitants...

Another old seigniorie which possesses many features of particular interest, is that known as the Seigneurie de St. David, situated in the heart of the French Canadian country. The manor house was built by the first Wurtele who came to this country...

Nothing remains of it now, but a mass of old ruins, around which cluster many tales of romance. According to old prints and descriptions, it was a very stately pile...

The late Judge Wurtele may be considered as "the last of the old Barons," because he was the last seigneur to render "Foi et Hommage" to the Governor on his succession to the property in 1853...

Another of the ancient chateaux of Canada, which is woven into the warp and woof of the history of the country is the Chateau de Ramesay, in the very heart of the city of Montreal. This building is one of the oldest, if not the oldest building in Canada...

The little daughter of the hostess looked long and inquiringly at the guest who she had been told was very learned man and a professor. During a lull in the conversation she spoke up. "What do you do in college, please, sir?"

Gazette. This building has been more fortunate than some of the other ancient structures of the country, as it was rescued from inevitable decay and ruin by being purchased by the Numismatic and Antiquarian Society of Montreal...

The Chateau Bigot, or "The Hermitage" as it is known among the English people of Quebec to-day, is possessed of an absorbing history as it has been the abode of both a man of the highest and noblest character...

The Chateau Bigot or "Beaumarais" as it was called when the infamous Bigot assumed possession of it, was, however, soon to witness different scenes than these. Councils continued to be held, but they were not councils which had for their aim, the advancement of the colony...

It is told that in this same mansion, the Intendant had a secret bower, in which he had confined, against her will, the Indian princess Caroline, and it was his habit to exhibit her to his boon companions.

Such then is a brief glance at an ancient and effete institution, which would be regarded as an anachronism to-day but which in "its day and generation" possessed its advantages as well as its disadvantages.

An Italian Bishop struggled through great difficulties, without repining or betraying the least impatience. One of his intimate friends, who highly admired the virtues which he thought it impossible to imitate, one day asked the prelate if he could communicate the secret of being always easy.

The young man, who desires a quiet tête-à-tête with a particularly charming person of the opposite sex, should accept this gentle hint and take along a box of Moir's chocolates when he calls. We will wager his lady friend will readily discover a secluded corner wherein they can exchange confidences...

The young man, who desires a quiet tête-à-tête with a particularly charming person of the opposite sex, should accept this gentle hint and take along a box of Moir's chocolates when he calls. Maligning Catholics.

"America" finds that society people as thinkers are, unfortunately, a small minority. Towards them gravitate, as planets and comets around the sun, a host of minor, frivolous stars for whom all things Catholic are a fit subject for ridicule.

"Don't Look so Cross."

A man was hurrying along a city street the other day when the above remark was addressed to him by an acquaintance going in the opposite direction.

quently corrugating his brows. Any intendment of thought or earnestness of speech is instantly accompanied by a frown and oftentimes a scowl, yet he is not ugly.

That it is a habit is demonstrable by one example. No better-natured people can be assembled anywhere than in the United States. Crowds of them will in line for hours at a ticket office or deliberately file out of a place of amusement with the utmost good nature.

Widow (tearfully).—John was such a hand to worry when things didn't go right. He simply wore himself out doing it. Why, the very last day he lived he was fretting because the price of coal had gone up a dollar a ton.

Friend (trying to say something consoling).—It is too bad—too bad, madam! But your husband is over all his trouble at last. He won't have to worry over the price of coal where he is now!

Advice to Ladies. CORNHILL, N. B., March 9th, 1910. C. GATES SON & CO., MIDDLETON, N. S. GENTLEMEN:—This is to say that in 1904 I was very sick. Life of Man Bitters and Syrup. which I did and can truly say they are wonderful. After I had taken the first two or three bottles, I felt much worse than usual, but as the directions said this sometimes was the result, continued their use, and soon began to see marked improvement in strength, so that I was able to work and gained 50 lbs. in flesh. I thank you for placing these remedies within my reach, and most heartily recommend their use to ladies at this time of life, and advise the continuance of them as I know it sometimes takes a few dozen bottles, but the cost is small compared with physicians' charges. I am sending you this that you may make it known and this benefit someone who may be suffering as I was.

Just what I've been looking for. "BEAVER FLOUR" makes ideal bread and pastry, because it is a perfect blend of Manitoba Spring wheat and Ontario Fall wheat. You don't need to keep two kinds of flour for bread and pastry. Beaver Flour makes both—a pure, white, nourishing, light loaf that "stands up" in the oven, and pastry that is crisp and appetizing. It is more economical than other flours, and appeals to all thinking women. Order it to-day from your grocer. DEALERS—Write for prices on all Feeds, Coarse Grains and Cereals. 115 THE T. H. JUST IN TIME.

The operating-room of the telephone exchange in Middleton looked bare and lonely with the curtains all drawn and only the two lights over the switchboard burning. Within that small circle of brightness Molly Stewart, night operator, and the only person in the building, sat quietly in her swivel chair.

On No. 186 line, as she listened in agony, came the sound of scuffling feet, a heavy jar as something fell. Then the light flashed on No. 29, and she recognized the voice of one of the Downs boys. In her fear she could scarcely speak intelligently.

The Decree on Daily Communion (Dec. 20, 1905) mentions only two conditions for worthily receiving the Blessed Eucharist: the state of grace and a good intention.

THE STAR'S THEORY OF SAFETY-VALVES.

The Montreal Star, in an editorial entitled "National Safety Valves," says: "The instinct of personal liberty must have a safety-valve or burst the boiler."

A "safety-valve," be it remembered, is a contrivance by which a boiler, over-supplied with steam, relieves itself of pressure automatically...

This maxim of the "safety-valve" is about as true and about as valuable as that concerning the sowing of wild oats, which is to say it is nonsense.

The Star says: "The average Briton will bow cheerfully, meekly, or grudgingly, to laws made to protect his neighbours for molestation by him."

If the Star means that the Briton resents laws which prevent him from doing himself moral injury, why many men who are passionate and wilful do resent such laws...

That is, in some cases, a sufficient reason for not exacting them. Were it otherwise, it was difficult to see why the state might not, with propriety, forbid all serious moral offences...

The Star's reasoning leads nowhere. The outbreaks of natural depravity are visible and undoubted, but to say that men must have them is to say that they cannot get along without them...

And what is the "bursting of the boiler," which is to follow, if men are not allowed to do these things? That is rather a puzzle.

But, we do not think the Star meant all that its words implied, or quite realized whether it drifted as its article went on. That is a fault we find with some of the Star's editorials.

Our London Letter.

LONDON, June 29th, 1910.

The Feast of the Holy Apostles, Peter and Paul, and the Vigil which preceded it in this year of Our Lord 1910, will be ever memorable days in the history of the Ecclesia Britannica.

For yesterday, in presence of a vast multitude of Catholics from all the three Kingdoms, and not a few representatives of the further portions of the Empire...

The previous day, in the Cathedral Hall Archbishop Bourne had solemnly exposed the sacred relics which were to be placed in the fourteen altars of the Cathedral at their solemn and individual consecration...

A stormy night had just given place to a bright windy morning and torrents of rain which deluged the streets had only just ceased to fall when the first procession passed round the great nave...

The Bishop of Clifton preached a sermon which will certainly be much talked about. Eloquent and prophetic, it dwelt upon the past, the present, and the future...

whose fine youthful faces brought memories of the man who planned and brought to being this mighty edifice before us, just as he had planned that edifice from whence a never ending stream of priests should go forth in the prime of their manhood...

Three times did the procession encircle the walls of the Cathedral, solemnly chanting as they went. Then the great doors were flung open, and the Bishops passed to their various altars...

It was indeed a day of prayer, for the Mass was not finished till just before 3 p. m. and immediately afterwards Sext and None were chanted, for it is a boast of the Metropolitan Cathedral that from the sad day when it opened its doors for the first time to receive the body of its founder...

Information, we must remember that where our forefathers suffered in their narrow home, we can look out upon a vast Empire which we have helped to build. Over us, too, waves the flag of Empire. Over us, too, the sun never sets.

To day the great rejoicings are continued, the dull brick walls of the cathedral have become a bower of verdure, stately palms wave about the altars and brilliant red lilies, white lilies and other choice blossoms adorn the sanctuary and side chapels.

It was almost more than a remarkable coincidence that the very day which sees the consecration of our Cathedral, and our own rejoicing that at length we have emerged from the shadows, should also see the introduction of a Bill for the amendment of the last insult and disability which disgraces the statute book of England against our faith.

The Casket and Its Contemporaries.

"The signs of future imperial strength" is the title of a very able and patriotic editorial in The Casket of the 30th June.

The Antigonish CASKET has been printing a series of valuable and interesting articles on the Catholic press some of which have been reproduced in these columns.

As soon as THE CASKET loses a good editor it always has the luck and judgment to find another valuable man to take his place.

There is no good in the outcome of quarrels between two Catholic pens, when both sincerely mean to work as Catholics; and yet, not only defense, but aggressiveness is necessary when dealing with foes who have but scant regard either for truth or justice.

More flies may be caught with a ray of honey than with two barrels of vinegar; but what do we want with flies; at most they are but troublesome little things.

While, then, we assure our admirable Antigonish contemporary that we deeply value their gentle preachments on unity among us all, we, at the same time, want to show we do, by publishing abroad the doctrine it teaches, and which says:

The Monitor quotes from a letter of the late editor of the New World, Dr. Charles J. O'Malley, in which he said: "As I see it, you have a splendid chance to build up and develop Catholic literary talent and Catholic talent in music, painting and sculpture, in California and the West.

We think the days of bickering between Catholic journalists are passing, and the unfortunate and injurious practice of trying to outdo each other, and the unfortunate and injurious practice of trying to outdo each other, and the unfortunate and injurious practice of trying to outdo each other.

Saved by the Rosary.

The following touching incident took place recently in a large town in Belgium:

There lived in this city, in the greatest poverty, two old people, husband and wife. They lodged in a miserable room for which they had to pay a sum small in itself, but far more than they could afford to give.

invoke Our Lady of the Rosary. She is the Consoler and Refuge of the miserable; she will save us.

The unfortunate couple felt revived by this ray of hope; the little piece of candle was found with some difficulty in the darkness, lighted and placed before an image of the Blessed Virgin that no one had been willing to buy.

Now, a seamstress, who lived in the same house, and whose window faced theirs, had occasion that night to give a sick child a drink.

Had it not been for the little end of the candle burnt before the statue of Our Lady during their rosary, or rather had it not been for the confidence in her protection which inspired her this little devotion, the good neighbor would never have thought of going near them.

Curing Hay.

The hay crop is one of the hardest the farmer has to save properly. The weather being the controlling factor it is hard to lay down any definite plan, the clover harvest being about over now.

In the making of first class hay, exposure to sunlight and rain after it has been wilted and especially after it has been coiled, must as far as possible be avoided.

CUTTING.

In cutting timothy hay at the beginning of the season, the mow is started in the morning, the tedder started at the same time and both kept going until noon.

The latter cutting does not require as much time in curing, but the quality of the hay is much injured by leaving too long before cutting.

Two Ways of Cooling a Room.

There are two methods of making cool a hot room for sleeping at night. One is English, one is tropic. The English method is to put a large block of ice in a bowl and let it evaporate in a room.

This is to take a sheet, dip it in the bathtub filled with cold water, wring it, then suspend in the center of the room, not far from the bed.

Silent Service.

"I cannot be of any use," is an exclamation used by many people. "I cannot be a missionary. I cannot nurse the sick, or visit the poor and do for them. There is nothing really worth while that I can do for Our Lord."

when plucked; but its sweet fragrance and beauty make it a blessing. Be like a star in your peaceful shining and a flower in your sweet purity and fragrant humility, and many will thank God for your life.

The living sacrifice does not always mean the active work. But it may mean the patient endurance of a wrong, the quiet bearing of a pain, the sweet forgiveness of a wrong, or a cheerful acquiescence in a disappointment.

Catholic Social Study in England.

Bishop Ketteler startled a great gathering of German Catholics in 1848 by declaring that social questions were more actual and more urgent than political.

As a result his influence has been simply incalculable. To him is due in very large measure that strong position which Catholics hold in Germany to-day.

The Catholics of Germany have learned the lesson. The Catholics of France have not, though many of them are at last making some effort to do so.

Have Catholics in other lands learned the lesson? At least they are beginning to do so. Social action is knitting them together as no political action could do.

The Catholic Church in England has reached a particularly interesting stage of its history. It has come out of the catacombs in which it was constrained to lurk for so many weary generations.

The Catholics of England, then, have attained to a satisfactory measure of organization. The Eucharistic Congress, held in London two years ago, made them experience with a thrill their religious solidarity.

The Duty of Joy.

For Christians joy is a duty. Abundant provision is made for their content, their peace of mind, their blessedness as well as their serenity.

For it is now becoming apparent that only on condition of such study will the Catholics of England be able to carry on and extend the work thus happily begun.

The Catholic Church has a distinctive social doctrine. As Professor Max Turmann has pointed out, her social doctrine is not merely eclectic; it is not a thing of shreds and patches borrowed from various schools.
