

THE SHORTCOMINGS OF JIMMY.

The telegraph editor of the New Orleans Morning Call withdrew a huge cigar from his mouth and expelled the smoke through his nostrils. "Who's that looking at the assignment book?" he demanded of his assistant. "That," he replied, "is no less a personage than the newest reporter. Nice-looking boy isn't he?" "He is that," Kelly Evans replied with what was, considering the source, remarkable enthusiasm. "But he must be new to the profession, or he wouldn't have those eyes and that skin. Say, where's he from—do you happen to know?" "I do," his assistant answered. "He's from Baltimore."

stomach. He had had that sensation often of late. Once he had mentioned it to Kelly Evans, whereupon Kelly had looked anxious and wise at one and the same time. "It's coming!" he had exclaimed. "That's the way it gets even the best of us. It's nerves and the climate. There's the only answer to that call," and he had pointed to a sign on which was inscribed "Ramon's Gin Fizz." "That's the first step, and the last leads to the old absinthe shop. And in due time you are carted out to the Arizona Desert or the St. Louis Cemetery. But you've got to do it and keep on doing it or lose your job."

get out a paper from beginning to end; that he fights fair and stands by his guns and is always a gentleman, no matter what the pressure; and that he is to be relied upon always, because he's never incapacitated, as the rest of us are. When he thought that I had turned against him, he didn't try to disarm me with drinks. He fought me with his best weapon—his ability and the courage of his convictions. And he stood by his guns upstairs last night—no drinks, no profanity from him. And the result was one of the best papers we've ever gotten out, and a request from the printers that the make-up job be permanently donated to Jimmy. That's the way that San Anton' paper is going to be run. I was never before quite sure that it could be done.

As for me, in a couple of weeks I'm off to the Arizona Desert to get out of my system the results of the insults I've been offering for twenty-five years. And if I ever come back, I'm going to acquire shortcomings just like Jimmy Leroy's.

revert love his leper children honored him to the last. They laid him out in the choir of the church that he had built, and at his head they placed a crucifix and a picture of the famous Polish Madonna of Czestochowa; around him they laid sheafs of fragrant lilies. They insisted that he should be buried among them; with their own hands they dug his grave and laid him to rest in the shadow of the big hospital built by him, with which his memory will for ever be connected.

Eight days after Father Beyzim, another Jesuit died, a Frenchman, Father Isidore Dupuy. During the campaign of Madagascar Father Dupuy acted as military chaplain to Gen. Voyron's troops, and his valuable services earned for him the Cross of the Legion of Honor. But his mind was set on a service less brilliant in the eyes of men than that of military chaplain, and, as soon as peace was signed, he devoted himself to the lepers of Ambahivoraka where he soon caught the malady. He knew he would die a leper and he cheerfully retired to a little cabin, where he was visited only by those who, being already touched by the disease, had nothing to fear from him.

In one of his letters he writes: "In former days the lepers were driven into the woods; they carried a little basket of food and a bell that warned travellers to keep aloof. Charity has changed all this. Instead of wandering in the woods, I live in a comfortable room; I do not need a basket, for my provisions are renewed three times a day. A little bell is at hand, but when I ring it, instead of anyone running away from me, my wants are immediately attended to. It is humiliating to be so kindly treated and to be able to give in return only a little gratitude." Like Father Beyzim, Father Dupuy accepted the solitude and humiliation of his terrible malady with joyful equanimity; he was not only resigned, but content to lay down his life in so good a cause. Alluding to the honor bestowed upon him as a reward for his devotion during the campaign he signed his last letter "Isidore Dupuy, Knight of Leprosy."

Spray the Horse.

Many are unaware that there are several sprays on the market which can be applied to the horse to relieve him temporarily from the tormenting flies. In some cases livery-stable keepers give their horses this treatment just before sending them out on the road. The spray can be used in the stable, also on days when the flies are bad. Dairyman use it for their cows as well. If one is too far away from a city or town where any of these preparations are for sale he may steep walnut leaves, and two or three times a day go lightly over the horse with a sponge wet with this. One ounce of oil of pennyroyal to fifteen ounces of olive, or cotton-seed oil makes a good fly repellent. This can be poured into the palm of the hand and passed quickly over the coat of the animal. Through August and September the pleasure of driving is largely spoiled unless in some way the horse is protected from the cruel attacks of the flies.

Charity Has Changed the Lot of Lepers.

TOUCHING ACCOUNT OF APOSTLES OF ISLAND OF MADAGASCAR.

The heroic devotion of Father Damien, the apostle of the lepers, is well known to English readers; Protestants and Catholic alike duly recognized the example of self-sacrifice that was given to the world by one who cheerfully faced a lingering and horrible death in the service of his afflicted flock, writes a special correspondent of The Catholic Times. But Father Damien has had many disciples. Although during their lifetime they avoided notice and sought to be forgotten, two Jesuits have hardly attracted the attention of the French press by their generous devotion to the lepers of Madagascar. Both, after years of patient suffering, died of the hideous disease six months ago.

The first was a Pole, Father Beyzim, who arrived at Tananarive in 1898. He was then 48 years of age, a gentleman by birth, and in appearance tall and strong, who had obtained his superior's permission to devote himself completely to the worst case among the lepers to those whose condition was such that they were separated from their companions. In the leper's hospital of Ambahivoraka he was at once the sick nurse, the cook, and the general servant of his charges. His dream was to build a new hospital for

ORANGEISM AND MURDER.

(4) It is still celebrated in Orange song and story:

"Oh, Dolly's Brae, Oh, Dolly's Brae, Oh, Dolly's Brae no more, And the tune we sang Was kick the Pope Right over Dolly's Brae."

Dolly's Brae is a village in the County of Down, in Ulster, and there took place the event which has been thought worthy of being preserved in the literature and the songs of Orangeism.

A DELIBERATE PLAN.

On the 12th of July, 1849, 2000 Orangemen were on their way from Ballyward to Castlewellan, in procession, 500 of them armed.

The Catholics of Dolly's Brae were not looking for trouble. They were, however, human. Such excursions had been common for many years.

PEACE AT THE DEMAND OF THE PRIESTS.

800 to 1200 Catholics assembled, many of them armed; but, at the demand of two priests, they stood back, and the procession passed through the village, without any interference.

THE REPORT OF THE ROYAL COMMISSIONER.

The firing then became general. The police charged, and of course charged on the Catholic party, which was engaged with the rear of the procession.

Whilst this was going on above, I lament to say that the work of retaliation, both on life and property, by the Orange party, was proceeding lower down the hill and along the side of the road in a most brutal and wanton manner, reflecting the deepest disgrace on all by whom it was perpetrated or encouraged.

The Orangemen had received no opposition in Magheramayo. Police Sub-Inspector Hill (Protestant), describes the Orangemen's acts as "disgraceful outrages."

And he says further: "No language can describe the scene of horror that has been enacted in this neighborhood."

Orange Grand Master Beers himself, summoned as a witness, said: "I call it a very serious blot, and deplore it deeply, as a man of humanity, and as a gentleman, or any man."

A DINNER IN HONOR OF THE RUFFIANS.

This same Mr. Beers was banquetted in honor of the "victory of Dolly's Brae." This dinner was presided over by the Sheriff, and the Royal Commissioner denounces it in his report as follows:

"Considering the recent calamity, the occurrence of the dinner at such a time, presided over by the High Sheriff, who is the officer by law appointed to select the panel of jurors before whom all parties charged with offences in that country must be tried, and accompanied by the utterance of such sentiments in his presence, must be lamented as highly tending to shake public confidence in the administration of justice."

In consequence of Mr. Berwick's report, Grand Master Beers and Lord Roden were deprived of their commissions as Justices of the Peace.

That is the story of Dolly's Brae, one of scores of similar carefully planned murders by wholesale, which have made the very name of Orangeism an offence to decent men.

- (1) Deliberate insult and provocation to Catholics. (2) Refusal to listen to officials of the law. (3) Cruelty and barbarity such as are to be looked for from men who are insane with hatred. (4) Approval and triumph openly expressed of the greatest crimes known to the law. (5) Orange officials Orangemen first and legal officers afterwards. (6) The disgraceful affair listed as a triumph for Protestantism, and sung of even to-day as a victory over the Pope.

Orangeism was the same in 1849 as it was when it was started. It is the same to-day as it was in 1849. It has neither learned nor forgotten anything.

Orangemen still organize excursions far out of their way, in order to insult their Catholic fellow-citizens with ribald and filthy songs and cries. Orangeism is as ready to hatch treason against George V. as it was to hatch it against William IV. and Victoria.

THE EXTINCTION OF THE ANCIENT HIERARCHY, by Rev. G. E. Phillips, Professor at St. Outhbert's College, Ushaw. (Sands & Co., London, pp. xv.; 440.)

It is a deplorable fact that Catholics do not, at the present time, study history as they ought to do. In the past, when the Penal Laws were in force, there was a much wider acquaintance with history, memoirs and biography on the part of the Catholic public generally than is now the case.

Despite the holiday season many people of the Army world came back to London on Wednesday to be present at the obsequies of a gallant Catholic soldier, a hero of the Mutiny known, or is misrepresented, or written at all. There is no excuse for this state of affairs. We have plenty of time to waste over novels and pamphlets, and magazines and we swim gladly with the modern stream of superficiality which brings us only a widespread knowledge of ignorance.

On Monday the Bishop of Nottingham, Dr. Brindle, laid the foundation stone of a magnificent new Church which is being built at Ashby de la Zouche, at a cost of some £13,000.

Our London Letter.

AN ANCIENT PILGRIMAGE REVIVED. Though, in the middle of August London is supposed to be an arid desert, in which the British tongue is never heard, a good many persons mustered for the Ransom Pilgrimage to Our Lady's ancient shrine in Hastings Castle which started from the Metropolis on Wednesday.

CARDINAL BOURNE IN FRANCE. Cardinal Bourne left Calais on Wednesday morning to be present at the solemn Triduum in honour of two British Priests martyred at that seaport in the days when it was part of the domains of Henry VIII.

IRLAND GOING ON PILGRIMAGE. In another week London will be invaded for a day by the 3,500 Irish pilgrims who compose the National Pilgrimage to Lourdes which is to be led by Cardinal Logue and the Irish Bishops and will be played into the great French sanctuary by the Artane Industrial school band.

A GREAT CATHOLIC GENERAL. Despite the holiday season many people of the Army world came back to London on Wednesday to be present at the obsequies of a gallant Catholic soldier, a hero of the Mutiny and a Commander of no mean abilities, whose name stood for many years for all that was best and most approved in the Army, General Sir Martin Dillon. He passed away on Monday, in his 88th year, at Charlbury, fortified with the last rites of the Church.

MASSACRE WORK IN DERRY. The condition of things in Derry is a scandal to a civilized country. The Orangemen, who have attacked the city, swarming into it with bands and banners and yelling horrible threats against Catholics, and insults at their dearest and most sacred beliefs, are now endeavouring to shelter themselves from the consequences of the crimes which they have committed by accusing the Royal Irish Constabulary of treachery.

THE BISHOP OF SCOTTISH PRIEST. The Bishop of Dunkeld received a Papal Brief on Saturday last appointing Provost Holden of Dundee Prothonotary Apostolic, an honour which has delighted the many friends and parishioners of this distinguished Scottish priest, who now enjoys the highest rank of a member of the Papal household.

The Turning Tide.

The annual report of the Registrar General of Ireland, just published, deals with certain facts which are hopeful signs of the beginning of a new and prosperous era.

landlord-made famine of 1847, Ireland's loss in population has steadily gone on. The latest report of the Registrar General shows that at last the birth rate exceeds the loss by deaths and emigration.

What may be designated as the beginning of the repopulation of Ireland is not the only cheering sign of the times.

An Irish Parliament sitting in Dublin will in the near future impart an added impetus to the prosperity to which the report of the Registrar General bears witness.

It is inconceivable that they should now grow lukewarm in her service, when their aid is needed to assure her final triumph in the long struggle in which she has borne herself in a manner so heroic as to make us all feel proud of being her children.

The announcement that Ireland's population for the first time in sixty odd years has increased, is the most welcome news that has come from our Motherland in many a day.
